

With some great people already on board, Transport for London Information Management (IM) is looking for more team members of the highest calibre to deliver positive change and help the organisation progress its journey forward.

In my six months here as Director of IM for London Underground, I have already experienced positive change and improvement and rest assured, the time ahead of us will only become more challenging and exciting. With TfL's internal recruitment journey already avidly underway, we're well into the process of attracting the most passionate, knowledgeable, talented and committed people on a permanent and - of course - business risk resilient basis.

We're working hard to transform the perception of IM across TfL. We need to lead by example and ensure TfL IM is seen as a key, integral, critical business partner responsible for an achievement and not just as a mandatory and necessary enabler or facilitator to it. And we're on our way.

The first phase of new permanent jobs has gone live and the process of filling key vacancies continues. I invite you to take a close look at the exciting opportunities on the table within the team that underpins the information management for London Underground. Not only will you receive unrivalled training, coaching and support, but working with us will also equip you with an invaluable and highly credible caché of transferable, recognised business and personal skills.

This is one journey that I promise will take you to some very exciting new places and how fantastic would it feel to know you played your part in helping shape and deliver the transformation of this organisation and the city it supports? Are you up for joining us for the challenge? I look forward to hearing from you.
